

REPOSITIONING GREECE
PART 2

"Rehabilitation"

The country wakes up from an 8-year-long economic coma, a period that saw radical transformation in business, technology and education in the West. We risk finding ourselves left behind. Our workforce did not keep up with the world and some of our most talented people already left the country.

In this session, Nikos argues that we can't have an economic recovery unless we rehabilitate an industrious middle class. He talks about new models of education, the role of security, employment costs and the virtues of brain drain.
